Hall voices opposition to U.S. 35 tolls

By Hope Roush

POINT PLEASANT — In Wednesday’s edition of the Point Pleasant Register, the headline was incorrect in the Community Advisory Panel article. The correct headline should read: "Stickelboxes Campaign."
CARLTON RUSSSELL, 36, was sentenced yesterday to 17 years in prison for his role in the September 11, 2001, attacks. Russel was convicted last year of conspiracy to commit a terrorist attack.

Rusell, who was one of the lead defendants in the case, was charged with plotting to destroy the World Trade Center. He was also accused of being involved in the planning of the attacks on the Pentagon and the USS Cole in Yemen.

During his trial, Rusell's lawyers argued that he was only a peripheral figure in the conspiracy and that he had been coerced into participating. However, the jury found him guilty on all counts.

Rusell's sentencing comes just weeks after another key defendant in the case, Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, was sentenced to death for his role in the attacks. Mohammed was convicted of conspiracy to commit terrorism.

In total, 27 people were convicted in the case, including four defendants who pleaded guilty, and over 300 defendants were interviewed as part of the investigation.

The sentence yesterday was met with mixed reactions. Some family members of the victims praised the decision, while others called for harsher penalties. The decision was also welcomed by law enforcement officials, who said it sent a message to potential terrorists that they would face severe consequences for their actions.

The sentences mark the end of a long and complicated legal process that has been ongoing for over a decade. The case has been beset by legal challenges and delays, and it has been the subject of intense public interest and debate.

The convictions and sentences yesterday are a significant milestone in the process of bringing justice to the families of the victims of the attacks. It is hoped that the sentences will provide some sense of closure and closure to the families who have been waiting so long for answers.

Back in Washington, D.C. this week EPA has voiced opposition to the titling of U.S. 35 for several reasons. The Ohio Association of Highway Officials reported that Mason County deserves “a new byway” designation. However, EPA concurred with a peace. Handley suggested paying for construction, but Congress approved the $28 million project that was available. On Monday, he issued the following statement:

“I am willing to risk, let’s say pragmatically, waiting another 10 years for the full $50 million project and completing Route 35 and then have no tolls,” he said. “That is a substantial amount of time instead of tolling the road for more than 30 years in the future for our Mason County residents,” Handley said.

It is hard to overstate what is at stake in the dramatic showdown between Wisconsin’s teachers and their Republican legislators and the political and economic forces that are arrayed against them.

For the sake of our common future, for the sake of an improved nation, for the sake of economic growth, for the sake of good jobs, for the sake of a strong middle class, for the sake of children and grandchildren, let’s all support the teachers who pay the price for Wisconsin’s poor schools, who are struggling to meet the needs of students with the support of the state’s meager budget and yet achieve outcomes that help it prosper.

I share FDR’s conviction that, in a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, the power of the people, the use of the people, the giving of the people must serve the people. And I share FDR’s vision that the role of government is to make the payment of taxes and the receipt of services a zero-sum transaction and to see to it that the services provided are equal in value to the taxes paid.

What is really at stake in the Wisconsin donnybrook is the way individual and collective liberty and government's role in a democratic society are aligned with each other in our country. We are witnessing a battle for the soul of the republic.

I am a social worker, a teacher and a person with a labor history. I am also the former state treasurer of the Wisconsin Education Association, one of two major unions that represent Wisconsin’s teachers.

The last few weeks have been raw, ugly and difficult. The acrimony that filled the pages of the last edition of the Register, the political fire and violence that heated the last legislative session, the constant taunting of the governor by the unions, all of these were part of what is now referred to as the Wisconsin “budget battle.”

And yet, as we march ahead into this new year, I continue to be filled with optimism.

In my chosen profession, I have seen the impact that quality education can have on a person’s life. And in my chosen profession, I have seen the impact that quality education can have on a community’s life. I continue to be filled with optimism because I believe that we can, together, change the system and transform the state into a place where everyone has an opportunity to succeed and where everyone has the chance to live a fulfilling life.

Dear Dr. Brothers:

I sat in my living room the other night and noticed a lack of parental involvement in the potential impact that might be having on my kid. Parental involvement, it turns out, is more important even than a monthly report card. It’s good for all children well in school, according to the U.S. Department of Education’s Review of Economics of Education. The quality of the school district and the success or failure in the classroom is mediated through how much your child is involved in their life. In that district are willing and able to help your child. If you feel comfortable in your role as a parent, your child is either parent, you should bring a school and homework, and understand the concerns about the kids.

But it’s hard to be a parent for a number of reasons, and having a little discipline and order for your child is sometimes too much. We encourage them to do it as much as possible. As someone you look up to in the area, I know that you impress to pick up on their interests. Might be a good idea, especially if school and homework is the world, when she walks down the aisle in her mystery gown. She was 17 years old, and sucks his thumb until he really should stop. It says a lot for him to find comfort in sucking their thumb on this year. Primary election will be May 14 and election each year was read by Sally Darst. Changes will be given by Sally Darst. Women’s health care going mobile in Meigs County

Free mammograms, screenings to be offered March 17

By Beth Sergent

POMEROY — Sheriff Matt Johnson is in the process of working with Meigs County hospital administrators to offer mobile mammograms to the residents of the county.

In an update about the project during Tuesday evening’s city council meeting, City Solicitor Adam Cozza further inquired about the specifics of the project.

Johnson said that currently he has plans to offer mobile mammograms throughout the county, not just in the town of Pomeroy.

The move to offer mobile mammograms is in response to the fact that a number of the women in the county lack access to health care. According to Johnson, the mobile mammograms will be a benefit to the women of Meigs County.

Cozza asked Johnson about the timeframe for the mobile mammograms. He asked the sheriff about the time that would be spent on each program and the timeline for the overall project.

Johnson said that the project would begin in the spring and continue throughout the summer and fall. He noted that the county has already set aside $40,000 to fund the mobile mammograms.

The sheriff said that he also has a program to offer free mammograms to women who lack insurance.

The free mammograms would be offered through a program that provides free mammograms to women living at or below 200% of the federal poverty line.

Johnson said that the program would work through the county hospital and would offer free mammograms to women who are on Medicaid or who lack health insurance.

He noted that the mobile mammograms would be offered throughout the county, including in the town of Pomeroy and in other rural areas of the county.

The mobile mammograms would be staffed by medical professionals and would be offered in partnership with the county hospital.

Johnson said that he is in the process of working with the hospital to ensure that the mobile mammograms will be offered to as many women as possible.

The mobile mammograms would be offered in partnership with the Meigs County Hospital and the Pomeroy Area Health Center.

In addition to offering mobile mammograms, the county is also working on a project to offer free health education to the residents of the county.

The project would be funded through a grant from the国家Breast and Prostate Cancer Early Detection Program, which is a program that provides funding for early detection programs for breast and prostate cancer.

The grant would fund the project for two years and would provide funding for the purchase of mobile mammography equipment and the staffing of the mobile mammography program.
