

Memories of the day...

By Aimee Laine

In front of a window, her gown's satiny sheen glistens against the afternoon light. Pearls sparkle as the bride grasps the silver clasp and drapes it across her arm. The photographer captures the moment.

Two arms wind their way through as a maid of honor guides the beaded dress down and over the bride's shoulders. It falls to the floor as buttons are one by one slipped into loops and the bodice is fit into place. Hands tremble as the emotion of the moment brings a mother to tears. The photographer catches the memory.

She stands at the threshold, her arm held tight in the crook of her father's. In seconds, the double doors will begin a slow arc and she'll take those last few steps, toward the man she loves. Always a daughter, soon to be a wife. She turns to her dad, takes one last breath and smiles. The photographer commits the moment to memory.

Their hands intertwine as they repeat their vows. He slips a ring upon her finger, and she does the same. Their eyes lock with the words that will bring them together: "With this ring, I thee wed ..." The photographer stops time.

No two weddings are the same, no two moments either. When the day goes by in a blur, will you recall the way flowers fit in your hand, how friends laughed, the tears that flowed? Will you see him as he ties the final bow, wipes the sweat from his brow? Will you see her as she shakes off nerves and prepares to take that final step down the aisle?

Two people will remember, but their recollections will be very different. At Aimee Laine, LLC, our photographers work with brides and grooms to create a image-filled story they'll both remember and want to read and re-read over many years.

We do this for you by learning what you want and working to capture it on your day.

"The quality is amazing and so is the relationship that you make with everyone," said Nicole, one of our 2009 brides. "The creativity and patience is something that I have not seen in other photographers."

Elizabeth, an October 2008 bride said, "We were a little nervous about having these pictures taken because we wanted them to be very natural and not so posed. Aimee listened to our concerns and requests and we ended up with the most awesome pictures ever!"

With camera in hand, we wait for the unexpected and capture the moments. Memories. Stories. Love. Photography. Aimee Laine.
