PB welcomes a Blast from the Past

By DAVE SCHWAB

I f you’ve ever wanted to feel like a kid in a candy store it’s not too late — you can again.

A trip to Rocket Fizz Soda Pop & Candy Shop at 1414 Garnet Ave., a franchise owned by David and Tammy Anderson, is like a trip to Candy Land — or back in time to a 1950s soda fountain.

Patrons get a sugar rush walking through the Pacific Beach shop’s front door. They get smacked in the kisser by the nostalgic decor, wowed by the vast assortment of soft drinks and confections that seemingly pour out of the walls.

There are also choice bits of memorabilia for sale thrown in for good measure, like cardboard cutouts of movie characters, as well as copies of concert posters and a few gag gifts, like Groucho Marx noses, Whoopie cushions, even hand-buzzers and Silly Putty.

“It’s built around being a kid,” said David Anderson. “It’s for the kid in all of us. Whether it’s truly a kid in a candy store or it’s you and I and that kid inside of us in a candy store, that’s the idea behind this.”

Tammy Anderson agreed.

“Everybody can find something they remember from their childhood here,” she said. “We’ve got 70- and 80-year-olds coming in and going, ‘Oh my gosh, they’ve got Necco,’ and 40-year-olds coming back and finding Astro Pops from the ‘60s.”

What’s people’s reaction to the store’s sweet treats?
“People walk in three or four steps … and they are totally overwhelmed,” he said. “Nostalgia is a big part of this, too, whether it’s candy or posters (or) soda, there’s a lot of nostalgia in this store. We’re talking about Dots, Hot Rocks, Abba Zaba chewy taffy bars and Milk Nips. There’s so many things in this store that bring people back to their childhood, and that’s the key.”

The Rocket Fizz franchise started out in Camarillo north of Los Angeles and is spreading like wildfire in Southern California.

The Control Group, Pacific Beach’s answer to Silicon Valley, took a break from its exponential expansion on Nov. 15 to lend a hand to amputees through a charitable project.

Employees and owners at the web startup, creators of instantcheckmate.com, stepped away from their computer screens for an afternoon of building prosthetics to be sent overseas to landmine victims. They invited Odyssey Teams, a training and team-building company that incorporates philanthropy into its programs, to their Mission Boulevard offices to lead the Helping Hands project.

“We were trying to think of something cool to do and we thought it would be good to do something that doesn’t just involve a monetary donation,” said The Control Group co-founder Kris Kibak. “We wanted something that would feel good to do, but also incorporate team building.”

Building prosthetics carries personal significance for Kibak. When he was in high school, he said, he broke his femur and had a titanium rod installed in his leg for two years. When it came time to remove the rod, he got a surprising request from his doctor:
“My doctor asked if it was okay for them to keep it,” he said. “[Titanium rods] are so expensive — my insurance had paid to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars.”

Kibak was barely trailing Alvarez with 24 percent (49,645 votes). However, on Nov. 20, Fletcher conceded and lent his endorsement to Alvarez, even though there are still 34,500 mail-in and provisional ballots yet to be counted, said city spokesman Juan Alvarez.

Former City Attorney Mike Aguirre collected a little more than 4 percent of the vote (9,801 votes).

“People walk in three or four steps … and they are totally overwhelmed,” he said. “Nostalgia is a big part of this, too, whether it’s candy or posters (or) soda, there’s a lot of nostalgia in this store. We’re talking about Dots, Hot Rocks, Abba Zaba chewy taffy bars and Milk Nips. There’s so many things in this store that bring people back to their childhood, and that’s the key.”

Pacific Beach resident Jenny Goff spent two weeks in August volunteering with the humanitarian aid organization No More Deaths (No Mas Muertes) in Arizona. Here is Part 4 of her account of a typical day in the lives of volunteers. Look for the first three excerpts of her experience at sdnews.com. For more information about No More Deaths, visit www.NoMoreDeaths.org.

Part 4

The No More Deaths camp, miles from the U.S.-Mexico border in Arizona, is buzzing with activity. A group of five migrant travelers sling on their tiny backpacks filled with granola bars, tortillas, cans of beans. I hear that M. had a full bottle of cologne in his pack and smile with the thought of the “necessities” that make us human. He hugs me in a cloud of spice and pine and wishes me “buena suerte!” (Good luck). He and I had attempted conversation across the picnic tables over many meals but our lack of language skills reduced us to laughter most of the time. I wish him “buena suerte” back and he continues his rounds, thanking every volunteer in camp. The other men do the same with hugs, handshakes and kind words.

We stand in the pooling light of the kitchen tent as they walk into the darkness of the shrub-lined trail to the north. It is surreal to watch them disappear into the night. Will they make it? They swore that they would stick together, that they wouldn’t leave anyone behind. But what if they were “dusted” and scattered by a U.S. Border Patrol helicopter? What if someone was injured or stung by a deadly scorpion or bitten by another rattler and ended up like one of the 477 (but most likely more) migrants who died in the desert last year? Would they still stay together? How long would the rest of their journey be? Days? Weeks? Will we ever know if any of them would make it? Will we see any of them when we sit in on the trial proceedings at Operation Streamline in Tucson?

Will they be one of the 70 detained migrants who will plead guilty of the criminal offense of “illegal entry” or “illegal re-entry” and be sentenced to serve time in privately owned, tax-payer funded, for-profit prisons? And if they do get caught, convicted and deported, that criminal record will prevent a path to citizenship if the currently debated immigration reform bill passes through Congress, so will they just...
Students take SeaWorld to task after viewing documentary

By DAVE SCHWAB

Point Loma High students reacting to “Blackfish,” an anti-marine mammal captivity documentary, have created a public service announcement (PSA) asking SeaWorld to stop using animals for entertainment.

Less than a minute long, the PSA, titled “Dear SeaWorld,” was created by students in Anthony Palmiotto’s Cinematic Arts and Video Production classes.

“We always do a documentary and when it (“Blackfish”) came on basic cable television, I just gave them an open-ended assignment that they could watch it and write something about it, an essay or a movie review,” said Palmiotto. “One of the kids said, ‘Why don’t we make a video?’ Then we started to piece together different reactions from students in different classes. That’s how it came about.”

“Blackfish” explores the accidental deaths of SeaWorld trainers and is critical of keeping killer whales in captivity and having them perform in shows. The film premiered at the Sundance Film Festival in January, then went mainstream Oct. 24 when it was featured on CNN and became the subject of several CNN news features.

The PSA shows several students reading portions of their letter to the aquatic park.

“Dear Sea World, thank you for all the amazing memories, the Shamu Show, Dolphin Point, the Penguin encounter,” begins the PSA. “But after watching the documentary ‘Blackfish’ on CNN, all those special memories have totally been cheapened. Is it true the orcas in your exhibits are kidnapped from their families? Is it true their larynspas are shortened in captivity? Is it true there have been numerous attacks on human trainers at your parks?”

“The only question is ‘Why?’” concludes the PSA. “So, until these questions are answered, there will be no more admission fees, no more rides, no more teddy bears. We just invite you to change your business model about 40 pounds. The gender will be determined in the coming weeks.”

When people think of an enjoyable shopping experience, they usually don’t imagine cookie-cutter stores or malls that look alike from state to state and city to city. Shopping at locally owned businesses in Pacific Beach and Mission Beach can be a lot more fun.

The ambiance of small, local shops is charming and quaint. Storefronts and display windows each have a unique take on the holidays, usually incorporating the distinct merchandise the store offers. Take a trip along Garnet Avenue, Mission Boulevard or North PB and you’ll be pleasantly surprised at the selection and value you can find in many of the local shops.

Instead of being ambushed by a pushy salesperson, the shopper is instead greeted by jovial owners. The shopping experience itself can be a lot of fun. You get to interact more with the “boss” at small mom-and-pop shops, so you’re treated like a real person, rather than cattle-herded through a chute. Merchants along Garnet Avenue, Mission Boulevard and adjacent streets in the community encourage shoppers to take their time and meander through the store, perusing item after item until the right one captures their attention. While they are in business to earn money, they generally will not pressure the shopper to buy a lot of extra impulse buys. Local shops also frequently go that extra mile for their customers by doing things like gift-wrapping and providing coffee or donuts at no additional charge.

The owners of local shops are in business because they love it. It’s a passion for them, not just a step on the career ladder. They buy products they feel will best represent their vision, instead of having to answer to a corporation. It’s this unique feeling that makes shopping so enjoyable when you spend your time and money close to home.

On June 13, the dolphin was found stranded. HSWR research scientists stabilized the animal until SeaWorld Orlando’s Animal Rescue Team transported the dolphin to the park’s marine-mammal rehabilitation facility.

The dolphin was in critical condi-

Conception Wellness offers an alternative to women’s health

By KENDRA HARTMANN

For Lisa Pugliese, health is a many-sided concept. And women’s health — particularly fertility, which is Pugliese’s area of expertise — is something that she feels needs to be approached from as many angles as possible.

Pugliese, a registered nurse and licensed acupuncturist, runs Conception Wellness in Pacific Beach. The clinic, which specializes in women’s health and fertility, focuses on nutritional counseling, lab work analysis, vitamin supplement plans and acupuncture. In a nutshell, Pugliese said, Conception Wellness patients are treated with a “comprehensive wellness approach that covers everything.”

“Because we focus on women’s health, with that comes a huge population of women with fertility difficulties,” Pugliese said. “We see everything from a difficulty getting pregnant to pregnancy loss. We try to look at the full picture and help them get into good health. We find that for a lot of women who correct those imbalances in their health, their fertility capabilities go away.”

The range of services offered at Conception Wellness can, indeed, improve a woman’s chances of conception. Western treatments, and have success treatment, in addition to their continued. “Then they come in and follow our conception wellness treatment, in addition to their Western treatments, and have success.”

Pugliese wasn’t always a champion of combining Eastern medicine with Western techniques. She worked for years as an RN, until one day in 1995, when she crossed paths with an acupuncturist at a seminar. Pugliese said she had suffered from severe sinus problems her entire life. The acupuncturist — Lorraine Keller, who Pugliese eventually went into business with at the Keller Clinic, which eventually became Conception Wellness after Keller retired — explained that her problems were probably related to imbalances in her body, which were probably fueled by her diet.

“I thought my diet was healthy. I was a vegetarian,” Pugliese said. “But when I changed my diet and she gave me acupuncture, and I have never had another sinus infection since then. I was just blown away that something I was dealing with for so long could be fixed like that. It inspired me to start studying Chinese medicine.”

Pugliese didn’t abandon her roots in Western medicine, but rather combined her new knowledge of wellness with her previous training. The concept, she said, is that people will benefit more from focusing on their health in a complete, holistic way rather than only looking to solve problems once they arise.

“What we try to emphasize is whole wellness, as opposed to a disease-based approach with a regular doctor,” Pugliese said. “Many Western doctors take the stance that if you’re not sick, you’re fine. We’re different. We don’t wait for that disease to develop to help you achieve wellness. You might not have a disease, but you might not be well either.”

Pugliese is careful to make sure her patients know that optimal health doesn’t come instantaneously.

“When working with us it’s a team approach,” she said. “There’s no magic pill, no magic needle. It comes from people working together on a plan of health and wellness, and that’s how we get the best results. We have had some cases where a patient comes in and gets two treatments and gets pregnant, but that’s not usually the case. It’s usually a matter of making changes at home and in life and that’s where we’ll get big results.”

For more information about Conception Wellness or to schedule a consultation, visit www.conceptionwellness.com.

FOR WOMEN WHO AREN'T SURE about committing to a comprehensive wellness approach but who still want to take advantage of the clinic’s fertility acupuncture, Conception Wellness offers what it calls “Fertility Fridays.” Open to the public, as well as established patients, the weekly treatments feature a two-hour program consisting of fertility acupuncture and a fertility massage for $129.

“It’s a nice program for women who are interested in the acupuncture part of our treatment, but not necessarily interested in our other treatments,” Pugliese said.

ALL-AROUND HEALTH

Conception Wellness’ Lisa Pugliese combines her past in western medicine as a registered nurse with her experience in easter medicine as a licensed acupuncturist to treat women’s health in a holistic manner.

Truckstop fills empty Eggery patrons’ bellies

By DAVE SCHWAB

The Eggery, Etc., a longtime staple of the Pacific Beach restaurant scene that went out of business this summer, was reborn under new ownership and management as Truckstop on Nov. 1.

“When local restaurant owner Aaron Phillips heard about the restaurant’s closure, he knew he had to carry on the tradition,” said Kassandra “Kassie” Dague, Truckstop’s general manager. “Just like the rest of us, he’d eaten there innumerable times and always remembered it as the place around the corner where you could go get a great pancake breakfast and as much coffee as your heart desired.”

Dague said Phillips was determined to give disheartened locals a place to call home again.

“So he decided to open Truckstop, a no-fuss, no-fills eatery that still offers great taste and craft,” she said, noting Truckstop’s menu offers pancakes “as big as a pie” and benedicts “to repent for.”

Formerly a bartender, Phillips has since become a full-on restaurateur. “I was a bartender in PB at 10 or 15 different bars, including Hennessey’s, MoonDoggies and PB Bar & Grill,” said Phillips, who saved his money and bought his first establishment, The Wood (formerly Hooters) at 4190 Mission Blvd. Phillips has since purchased and operated the Red Saloon below the Promenade at Pacific Beach.

But Phillips decided to keep a few of the old favorites on the menu “as a tribute to The Eggery and so that the regulars had something familiar to come home to.”

The Eggery, Etc., a longtime staple of the Pacific Beach restaurant scene that went out of business this summer, was reborn under new ownership and management as Truckstop on Nov. 1.

“Day by day, we can give Pacific Beach something new to talk about,” said Phillips. “Hopefully, the Truckstop will be another example of what a little elbow grease and a great menu can do for a place.”

FILLING A HUNGRY VOID

Though residents and regulars at The Eggery were disappointed when the restaurant closed its doors this summer, Truckstop has stepped in to provide food “your grandma makes,” said owner Aaron Phillips.

Phillips said he intends to offer comfortable food at Truckstop. “It’s stuff that makes you feel good like your grandma cooked it.”

Phillips said of offerings like braised short ribs and mashed potatoes, fried chicken and sugar-and-spice salmon. “It’s all-American cuisine,” he said. “It’s all stuff that makes you feel good like your grandma cooked it.”

Speaking of which, Phillips said his grandmother was a great cook whom he learned and borrowed from and whose recipes live on in Truckstop’s menu.

BIOLOGISTS FOR A DAY — GIRL SCOUTS BECOME MARINE BIOLOGISTS FOR A DAY – More than 40 aquatically adventurous Girl Scouts in grades 6-12 recently participated in You Can Be ... a Marine Biologist. SEACAMP San Diego hosted the one-day career exploration event in Mission Bay. The Girl Scouts began in SEACAMP’s labs, where they learned about 31 species of native fish and invertebrates. They touched live sea stars (star fish) and sharks in the lab aquaria, examined preserved specimens, discovered how to distinguish male from female sharks and found out why lungfish can survive outside of the water.

Donning snorkels, they explored Mission Point, searching for marine creatures in their natural habitats. The girls encountered purple sea urchins, giant limpets and — to their delight — a California sea hare, one of the world’s biggest gastropods. The girls also tried their hand at seining — using a long net to collect shoreline sea creatures for study before releasing them safely back into the bay.

“One learned that I’m very adventurous,” said Caylee Von Houten of Girl Scout Troop 6456. “My favorite part of the day was meeting sea creatures in the water,” said Girl Scout Nadia Zuñiga, a member of Troop 5965. The event was part of Girl Scouts San Diego’s “You Can Be ...” series, designed to introduce girls to STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) professions. YOU CAN BE ... A MARINE BIOLOGIST

The Andersons credit their four children with getting them started as nostalgic candy store franchisees.

“Our kids are the ones who inspired us to do this,” David Anderson said. “They’re big fans, obviously, of the product and concept. My wife and I looked at each other and said, ‘Let’s do this.’”

Classic rock ‘n’ roll and pop music plays in the background, like Michael Jackson’s “Thriller,” as visitors scan the store. Browsing down the aisles there’s every imaginable kind of candy, including a huge taffy section, as well as British- and sugar-free displays.

“The British table is insanely popular,” said David Anderson. Tammy said British chocolate is richer than American, as it is made with less sugar and more cocoa. Sign plaques with whimsical and humorous sayings stand out. One depicts a roadside chicken that reads, “Chickens can cross the road without having their motives questioned,” another with a “Wizard of Oz” take showing ruby slippers, proclaiming, “It’s still about the shoes,” while yet another from the “Mom Cave” series states, “I’d shop less but the economy needs it.”

“It’s been very interesting and just a lot of fun,” said David Anderson of the business venture, adding the best time to be around is Friday after PB Middle school lets out when, he said, it’s just like Halloween as the candy store is deluged by kids — and their parents.

“This place is a madhouse because all these kids come in and they just freak out,” he said. “The parents come in and they eat more (candy) than the kids. Their baskets are even bigger than their kids because they get so excited about finding stuff they haven’t seen in years since they were a kid.”

SeaWorld officials condemned the accuracy of “Blackfish” in its representation of what goes on behind the scenes at SeaWorld.
“Blackfish” is billed as a documentary, but instead of a fair and balanced treatment of a complex subject, the film is inaccurate and misleading and, regrettably, exploits a tragedy that remains a source of deep tragedy that remains a source of deep pain for [SeaWorld trainer] Dawn Brancheau’s family and colleagues,” said David Koontz, SeaWorld San Diego spokesman. “To suggest that an attraction should not be maintained in a zoological setting, the film paints a distorted picture that withholds from viewers key facts about SeaWorld — among them, that SeaWorld is one of the world’s most respected zoological institutions, that SeaWorld rescues, rehabilitates and returns to the wild thousands of wild animals every year, and that SeaWorld commits millions of dollars annually to conservation and scientific research.
Perhaps most important, the film fails to mention SeaWorld’s commitment to the safety of its team members and guests and to the care and well-being of the animals. As demonstrated by the company’s continued research and improvement to its killer whale facilities, equipment, and procedures both before and after the death of Dawn Brancheau.”
Koontz added SeaWorld’s annual rescue program has spanned nearly five decades and has added more than 22,000 animals.
“Responding to wildlife in crisis is something we are passionate about,” he said. “Our rescue team is on call seven days a week to assist animals that are orphaned, ill, injured or in need of expert care. Our goal is to successfully rehabilitate animals for return to the wild. The small percentage of animals whose injuries are too debilitating to permit release are given lifelong care. So far in 2013, SeaWorld San Diego has rescued more than 400 marine mammals and hundreds of marine birds.”
Point Loma High cinematography students discussed “Blackfish” and their views about keeping marine mammals captive.
“I was a little angry and disappointed at SeaWorld,” said Hayley Roth. “They keep [animals] locked up in little crates all night and only let them out for shows and training. It was pretty bad.”
Student Thaddeus Greene had a slightly different take.
“I was touched by the trainers dying because I had a mentor from Big Brothers Big Sisters who was a SeaWorld trainer and after I watched ‘Blackfish’ I thought, ‘What would happen if he died?’ I was thinking how my life would have been changed if he was never in my life at all. So while it’s sad SeaWorld is treating animals the way they are … I think a trainer’s life is just as sad.”

Kibaj joined his employees in building a hand for the project, during which participants were split up into groups of three, each group building one hand. Todd Demorest of Odyssey Teams, who led the project, threw a twist into their efforts, however: every participant had to wear a compression sleeve on one hand, rendering it nearly unusable. The rule forced participants to work together, each helping build a prosthetic hand using only one working real hand. “We want people to learn, not just do. We’re hoping they walk away from this with some wisdom, as a company and as people,” said Demorest. “We’ve found that with an emotional component, they’ll remember what they learned from it longer. They might be struggling building this hand right now with just one hand. They’re total beginners. They’ll look at their hands differently for a long time.”

Demorest said Odyssey Teams got involved with prosthetics several years ago when the company struck up a partnership with LN-4, or the Ellen Meadows Prosthetic Hand Foundation. Odyssey spreads the foundation’s mission through its team-building seminars, after which it sends the finished hands back to the foundation, which distributes them around the world to amputees. For those who fear they might not possess the expertise to build a prosthetic someone will use day in and day out for everyday tasks, rest assured, Demorest said. “[The hands are] designed to be easy to build, cost effective, functional and durable,” he said. “And they are.”

As team members at The Control Group worked together to fit components together—a process akin to building furniture from IKEA, Demorest said—working limbs began emerging, the telltale “click” of functioning prosthetic fingers signaling a near-finished product. The teams weren’t finished when they produced a hand, however. The project also involved hand-decorating a carrying case for the prosthetic, along with a donation for the recipient to see a hand for the first time.
